Wreckage of Zia's plane sent secretly to US

(Agencies): The wreckage of the plane, which crashed last month killing Pakistani President Zia-ul-Haq, has been secretly flown to the United States, where analysts hope to trace whether the plane was downed by a bomb blast, administration officials said.

The officials, who requested anonymity, also disclosed that America's relations with Zia had soured at the time of his death because of serious policy differences.

Zia allowed Afghan rebels to be based in his country and his government served as the condust that funnelled US weapons to them, State Department officials said. In many instances, Zia personally supervised the operations they said.

"Parts of the engine have been sent back to the manufacturer. Lockheed, which makes the plane, would get parts of the fuselage," an aerospace industry source said. "It's a team effort, in other words.'

A State Department spokesman declined to comment on the transfer of the wreckage, saying only that "the investigation is ongoing."

Intelligence sources said US officials are convinced the crash resulted from sabotage, possibly from a bomb concealed among 30 baskets of mangoes aboard

"His death was no accident," an administration official said. The Washington Post, quoting sources in Pakistan, reported today that "all but one of six Pakistani and American invesngating teams that visited the crash scene .. during the initial on-scene phase of the investigation have reached a 'near consensus' that a bomb blast caused the plane crash."

Disrupt

Pakistan, which is proud of its own intelligence capability, was reluctant to give up the wreckage of the C-130 erasb, which occurred just after takeoff from Pakistan's Bahawalpur military airport on Aug 17, sources said.

A US government Middle East intelligence expert predicted that the crash "will be traced back to," the Khad, the Sovietcontrolled Afghan intelligence

But other US intelligence officials emphasised that there still are other suspects, including dissident Pakistani military officers, members of the Shia fundamentalist movement or other civilian opponents of Zia.

US officials said divisions within the Pakistani Army run very deep. They said there is evidence that Pakistani generals last April ordered a huge dump of weapons intended for Afghan rebels to be blown up to disrupt an audit designed to determine bow many had been stolen by

Army officers. Civilian Prime Minister Mohammad Khan Junejo had been investigating the military thefts when the explosion occurred. Zia soon dismissed Junejo and the civilian government, a move that even outraged some military officers. Zia responded by sending the vice-chief of staff travellingaround the country to try and pacify discontented hrigadier generals and colonels, US officials said.

US officials also pointed out that many of Pakistan's Army officials were dissatisfied with Pakistan's on-the-ground role in Afghanistan, where Pakistani advisers were directing rebel assaults on Soviet-beld towns.

"No Army likes to go and ebase bandits," a Pentagon analyst said. "Moralealways hits the floor when that bappens."

Yugoslavia to host summit

Non-aligned states manage to avert split

NICOSIA, Sept II, (Reuter): The Non-Aligned Movement is set on a higger role in inter-national affairs but seems unsure over ways of finding an effective niche on the world stage. "We know what we want to do," said one diplomat during a foreign ministers' conference in Nicosia, "But we haven't got anywhere near agreeing on bow to set about it."

At the end of the four-day meeting, the non-aligned ministers promised to help the world's "have-nots" and managed to avert a split over regional conflicts and disputes.

But several delegations criticised the voluminous reiteration of principles. To bead off a crisis of confidence, the minister issued a "Nicosia declaration" saying the movement should streamline procedures and initiate change.

Angered

They also resolved the issue of which member-state will host the 1989 summit and take on the three-year chairmanship after a delay that angered many delegates.

Yugoslavia was chosen after formal candidates Nicaragua and Indonesia failed to win enough support. The issue delayed the start of the final session yesterday while Belgrade considered wbether it could accept without a stamp of approval from the Yugoslav federation.

Highlights of the final statement included:

 Middle East: Ministers deplored Israel's "iron fist" policy in suppressing the 10month Palestinian uprising in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip and called for UN supervision of the Israeli-ruled

South Africa: The document lashed out at Pretoria's apartheid policy and its role in Afghanistan: Ministers called for a comprehensive peace settlement and the return of refugees to their homes.

Western Sahara: Ministers

accepted a call for direct talks between Morocco and the Algerian-backed Polisario Front despite opposition from the Moroccan delegation.

• Kampuchea: The conference reaffirmed the role of the regional peace efforts.

• Disasters: The statement appealed for aid for flood victims and reconstruction in Sudan and Bangladesh.

 Hostages: Ministers appealed for the immediate release of all hostages and abducted people, wherever they were

Deht: The conference urged dehtor and creditor countries and banks to solve the debt

A theme running through several speeches and working papers was how the 101-member Non-Aligned Movement could rise to the challenge of superpower rapprochement.

"Our movement cannot afford to be on the sidelines," said an Egyptian document setting out ideas on the movement's

Several speakers slammed the paperwork. Moroccan Foreign Minister Abdelauf Filali criticised the "long, turgid documents that are forgotten as soon as the meeting is finished."

Gulf peace talks remain stalled

SAFAR 2, 1409 AH

GENEVA, Sept 11, (Agencies): In the peace talks between Iran and Iraq today, prospects were uncertain as to whether the two sides would agree to a recess or to move the talks to New York.

The foreign ministers of Iran and Iraq met yesterday for their first direct peace talks in more than two weeks

But talks were halted after less than four hours, suggesting an impasse over lraq's refusal to move the negotiations to New York and over Iran's support of a recess and change of location.

Foreign Minister Tareq Aziz led the Iraqi delegation to the meeting at the UN office in Geneva. The Iranians, headed hy Foreign Minister Ali Akbar Velayati, arrived less than five minutes later

A UN-sponsored ceasefire took effect on Aug 20, clearing the way for talks on a lasting settlement of the nearly eightyear-old Gulf war.

Earlier yesterday, an Iraqi official was quoted as saying Baghdad refused to suspend negotiations and move them to New York. Saadoun Hammadi, Iraqi Minister of State for Foreign Affairs, was quoted in a newspaper interview as spelling out his side's position, which clashes with Tehran's willingness to con-sider a break and shift of venue.

In the interview published vesterday in the Abu Dhabi daily Al Ittihad, Hammadi said the talks are passing through a difficult stage and accused Iran of trying to scuttle them from the start.

Pope raps racial discrimination

HARARE, Sept 11, (Reuter): Pope John Paul led 150,000 singing, swaying people in a cheerful, uniquely African mass in Harare today and called for reconciliation in Zimhabwe to end the sins of racial and trihal discrimina-

Bands played kudu horns, drums and rattles, women ululated and children in white danced and waved yellow papal flags as the Pope arrived for the mass, first of his nine-day Southern African tour, at a racecourse in Harare's posh northern suburbs.

The Pope was cheered as he toured the racecourse under hright sunshine in a bullet-proof popemohile made from a converted truck and then passed through the crowd on his way to an altar backed by palm fronds and decorated with yellow flowers.

Dressed in pale green vestments and a yellow and white mitre, he was preceded to the altar hy laughing, dancing children and women, to a background of the rhythmic African music and ululation which accompanied the entire mass.

The Pope elearly enjoyed the African flavour of the occasion, the higgest crowd ever assembled in Zimbabwe, and smiled happily as he hiessed the throng.

Message

He was cheered when he said
"God hiess all of you" in the local Shona language. At the end of the mass he thanked the crowd for "your wonderful songs."

But his message was a serious one. In the homily he spoke of those who had died during the war against white rule and in conflict since, mentioning hy name Bishop Adolph Schmitt, killed in an amhush on a remote road in 1976.

CAIRO, Sept 11, (Reuter): Lehanese President Amin Gemayel called his strife-torn country "a hijacked airliner" in remarks published today and deplored a lack of world interest in its prohlems.

"Lebanon is a hijacked airliner and all passengers are threatened," he said in an interview with Cairo's Al Ahram newspaper.

Gémâyel said he was disappointed that the Lebanese question now received little international interest as the focus shifted to the Iran-Iraq peace talks, Afghanistan and Angola.

"Lehanon is on the verge of an abyss. It cannot wait any longer. Perhaps it will be lost when its turn comes," he said.

Gemayel is due to step down as President on Sept 23 bm the Lebanese Parliament has failed so far to choose a successor. Many Christian deputies boycotted the previous session to block the appointment of Syrian-hacked front-runner Suleiman Franiieh.

"Unfortunately, the Lebanese are deprived of their own will. Direct foreign pressures from beyond the borders have often been translated into explosions and assassinations and the

Despite the US election campaign, he hoped that a dialogue involving Damascus and Washington on Lebanon would bear fruit.

..."It seems these contacts are still continuing and we hope they will succeed ... We are looking for a normalisation of ties with Syria, which the United States is seeking," he said.

Interviewed on Israel television's Arabic-language service, Yassin said: "First, Israel has to say what it is willing to give the Palestinians, then we shall see (about negotiations). If Israel recognises Palestinian rights, there will be talk."

His statement appeared to soften previous hardline positions concerning Israel.

Israeli political observers said Yassin may have moderated his statements in speaking to the state-owned television to send a message to the Israeli leadership that he should be considered in any talks between the government and Palestinians.

Rabin has also said Israel faces a growing chance of war in the coming year at a time when a Palestinian uprising in the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip is placing heavy demands on the Army.

PLO set to declare independence

ABU DHABI, Sept 11 (UPI): The PLO, seeking to preserve a fragile unity between moderate and radical factions, appears set to declare a Palestinian independent state with only an implicit recognition of Israel, Palestinian sources said today.

The future state will be established in the Israeli occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip to III a political vacuum left by Jordan's King Hussen's surprise decision to break all administrative and

The declaration of an independent state in the occupied territories and the setting up of a provisional government, probably headquartered in Beglidad, Iraq, have already been agreed to by the PLO, Palestinian officials

A PLO official said setting upa Palestinian state in the territories occupied by Israel in the 1967 war, means a "de facto" recognition of Israel.

Maung Maung threatens crackdown

Burma sets election schedule

RANGOON, Sept 11, (Agencies): Burma's Parliament today scheduled a multi-party general election to be held within three months, and President Maung Maung threatened "severe action" against people who defy law and order.

Maung Maung told the Parliament yesterday that "severe action will be taken against anyone or any group that does not abide by law and order and resorts to violence," a political source said.

Parliament said elections would be held not earlier than a month and a half from today and not later than three months from

Hard line "It sounds like an attempt to reimpose a very hard line against demonstrators," a Western diplomat said of Maung Maung's remarks. An English-language news broadcast on Radio Rangoon said Burma's constitution had been abolished at the Parliament session, hut diplomats and analysts said this was a formality because the constitution mandated a one-party state.

Multi-party elections were authorised yesterday by an emer-gency congress of the ruling Burma Socialist Programme Party (BSSP). The Parliament said it would remain the country's legislature until a new Parliament was formed. It said the council of state, headed by Maung Maung, would set the date for the elections after receiving suggestions from new parties that it expects to be formed.

Maung Maung attacked the recent formation of a rival government by former Prime Minister

"To those who formed a parallel government, it is extremely grave and dangerous for them as well as for the country. I warn those responsible for the lawlessness to cease such activities," he said. Last Friday, U Nu said he had formed a 26member rival government and announced elections would be held Oct 9,

"WHY is the woman hurdened with misery and suffering?"
asks Baba (Dr Shreeram Lagoo) in Aurat Teri Yehi
Kahani (Woman! This is Your Story). One may ask script-writer Mohanji Prasad, who also directs the film, the same question. Why indeed?

The opening, title song puts a damper on the women's fate, saying that she should "serve (sitently), forgive (unquestioningly) and obey (blindly)." Not content, the lyricist spells her doom. There is no way a woman can ever find happiness, at least not in Prasad's dismal view, as projected for three gruelling hours in "Aurat..."

Savitri (Meenakshi Sesbadhiri) cleans, dusts, cooks, serves, and washes, apart from bearing the step-mother's torture. Yet, she smiles. Such is the fate of the woman that Mohanji Prasad must have bought gallons of glycerine to manufacture crocodile tears shed by nearly all characters in the film.

Savitri's tears never dry (one reason why Meenakshi's eyes seem seductive). Viewers, though, should keep glycerine—or onions—handy if they wish to join the cry babies.

Savitri's contrived miseries

Savitri's contrived miseries follow the beaten track. Her fate is sealed; her code of conduct prescribed: she must not demand, desire, expect, feel or love anything or anyone. She must endure. Why? In Hindi films, the woman's role is defined — she is the object of ridicule, humiliation and suf-fering, depriving her of dignity and bonour. It seems all actresses, from Meena Kumari to Rekha and Meenakshi, are destined to conform in such tearjerkers. Mohanji Prasad's tedious script flounders painfully depicting Savitri's woeful tale. One must give credit to Meenakshi for rising above the mundane and injecting vigour into a listless, cheerless role, and for making the film tolerable.

Some respite is provided by the comic duo - Gadbad Gbotala, played by Pran and Kader Khan, who kidnap the wrong child and end up reducing their ransom demand from millions to a few rupees. "Aurat ..." is Prasad's victim, exploited ruthlessly for his benefit. At best, Prasad's film can be called "Woman, this is not your story."

Biwi Ho To Alsi

J.K. Bihari attempts to show two faces of Eve - the victim and the tyrant - in Biwi Ho To Aisi. Shalu (Rekha) lives up to the definition of a woman in Hindi filmmaker's dictionary. She is docile, obedient, caring and loving. Mrs Bhandari (Bindu) is not.

She is domineering, dominating and rules the roost. Though exaggerated, both characters manage to entertain, provided you suspend dis-The shrill, piercing voice of storms off to order her husband (Kader Khan) to "behave himself" and rushes off to the office (she is a managing director) to chit chat with friends on the phone, while her husband cools his heels at home.

"My word is the law," she explodes, when the meek, henpecked hushand is out of line. When the husband listens to Saigal's songs, she advises him to "enjoy pop and rock." While the hubby conunues to disobey her and rewinds the "Gham dive mustaqil ..." tape, she shrugs her shoulders and joins the ladies to discuss her son's

Iraq adopting a wise policy

THE words of Iraqi President Saddam Hussein during bis meeting with Arab information ministers, truly reflects his keen memory and determination to reward those who stood with his country during the war.

The President affirmed that Iraq in its reconstruction efforts will not forget those who stood by Iraq and did not fear the sound of mortars - whether they be governments, establishments or individuals in the Gulf and Arab peninsula and some other parts of the world. The Iraqi President said: "We will never forget our friends."

Iraq, which emerged victorious after eight years of war, is now entering another eight years of reconstruction. Iraq is no longer a country with small diplomatic weight, nor is it seeking to shape its economic or political system. Under the present leadership, Iraq is a country with strong political clout.

During the past few years, the Iraqi President has called upon the private sector to wbole-beartedly join the state in getting the wheels of the reconstruction vehicle into high gear and frankly admitted that the state cannot launch this programme alone.

The state's primary role, be said, is to protect the sovereignty of Iraq and create rules for the preservation of order and good relations between people.

In closing the chapter of this crazy war, Iraq opens another - the file of full-fledged maturity. The events of the past 20 years bave provided Iraq with a newly developed shape and ability.

With this new capability and sense of direction of Iraq. we will find many opportunities for those who lived and felt with Iraq its sweet and bitter days during the years of

The opportunities for the reconstruction of Iraq will not be open to the US or other countries which believed that by threatening to boycott Iraq they could frighten the country or affect its development plans after the

It is beart-warming that the Iraqi leadership announced that Iraq will not forget those who stood by it in its dark hours, nor will it stand against those who chose a

This amply demonstrates that Iraq is above hate and the Iraqi leadership is adopting a wise policy.

Libya seeks to build Arab unity

By Philip Shehadl

RAS JDAYR, Libya, (Reuter): Beside the highway is a heap of rubble, all that remains of a once formidable Libyan customs and passport post at this border crossing with Tunisia.

Libyan leader Muammar Khaddafi ordered the post destroyed in a dramatic illustration of his passinn for Arab unity. A loose economic and cultural grouping of North African states will, be hopes, be the first step.

A year ago, the border posts were a no man's land. But since Tripoli and Tunis re-established diplomatic ties last December, hundreds of cars and trucks pass the frontier daily.

Leaving Libya, there is a pic-ture of Khaddafi and a sign that reads: "The great Jamahiriya (state of the masses) bids you farewell to another part of the great Arab nation.

Entering Libya, there is a green map of the Arab world and a similar sign of welcome. Incredibly, there are no Libyan officials in sight.

Sell

Khaddafi, returning from a meeting last May with Tunisian President Zine Al Abidine Ben Ali, is said to have passed the Libyan border stations and told his aides: "Blow them up."

Vendors now sell soft drinks and cigarettes next to piles of rubble. Long lines of cars queue for cheap Libyan petrol but not for Libyan entry or exit stamps. There is oo one to issue them.

In fact, nething stops non-Arabs who need visas for Libya from entering the Jamahiriya without them at Ras Jdayr although they are strictly required at Tripoli Airport.

Ties

Tunisia and Libya broke diplomatic ties in 1985 after Libya expelled thousands of Tunisian workers in a bid to save hard currency. Libya accused Tunisia of complicity in a 1986 US air raid on Tripoli aod Benghazi, while Tunisia said Libya was harbouring dissidents trying to overthrow the government.

The coming to power of Ben Ali last November smoothed the way to a rapprochement. The two countries agreed to settle dis-workers in Libya and to explorea bost of joint ventures in the fields of agriculture, oil and water.

The two leaders met on a Libyan cruise ship in the Mediterranean last week and agreed jointly to explore for oil in once-disputed waters on the conunental shelf.

The fence-mending with Tunisia is part of a broader Libyan diplomatic offensive to repair links with neighbours and break the isolation suffered after the

"For the first time in years Libya has been making friends with, instead of confronting, its neighbours," a Western neighbours," a Western diplomat in Tripoli said.

War

A long and bloody war with southern neighbour Chad ended last year and Kbaddafi announced last week that only identity cards would oow be needed for Algerians and Libyans to visit each other's countries.

Tunisia still requires passports at the border but not visas and a joint identity card is under dis-

Only the border with Egypt remains shut - a bid by Khaddafi to open it earlier this year met rejection from a suspicious President Hosni Mubarak, still the target of Libyan invective for the 1979 Egyptian-Israeli peace

At Ras Jdayr, relatively smart Libyan cars with green licence plates — the colour of Khaddafi's 1969 socialist revolution queue up on the Tunisian side carrying families of tourists.

Tunisian pick-up trucks bound for Libya are packed with grapes, tomatoes and consumer goods for sale. Since the border opened, some 30,000 Tunisians have crossed into oil-rich Libya to work in botels, farms and restaurants, Tunisian officials said.

Restrictions

The border opening has been a breath of fresh air to many Libyans, subject to travel and currency restrictions since a fall in world oil prices plunged their country ioto recession.

Khaddafi has unsuccessfully sought mergers in the past with Sudan, Syria, Tunisia, Algeria, Morocco and Egypt.

Camp David is unique for its high-stakes drama Unforgettable moment of triumph

By Jim Anderson

WASHINGTON, (UPI): The leaders of the United States. Egypt and Israel gathered at Camp David on Sept 6, 1978, in the brilliant sunshine of a perfect autumn in western Maryland to pray and work for peace.

Thirteen days later, they emerged against the background of thunder and lightning storm to announce they had succeeded in establishing the groundwork for an Egyptian-Israeli peace settlement. That would include an Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai, a peace treaty between the two countries and a framework leading to Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank and Gaza Strip. It was an unforgettable moment of triumph, raising the Carter presidency to its pinnacle. But lurking in the shadows were a series of unresolved issues,

But the late Israeli Defence Minister Moshe Dayan, who also attended that final, disagrees in his memoirs with Vance, saying that the Israelis accepted only a three-month

Suspension

Carter, in his book, says he produced the wording of a letter that would amount to at least a 5year suspension on new Israeli settlements in the West Bank. He says the Israelis agreed.

Dayan says Begin merely agreed to think about it and he says an Israeli letter (calling for only a three-month pause) was handed over to the Americans on the next afternoon, just before all the officials went to the White House for the gala announcement of victory.

But, Vance, Carter and former National Security Adviser Zbig-niew Brzezinski all say in their memoirs that the Israeli letter was not received by the Americans until Monday morn-ing, after the victorious White House ceremony Sunday night

This is more than a quibble over the recollection of a few hours. If the Israelis are right, they served fair warning before the ceremony that they were hanging tough on a central issue.

If the Americans' recollection is right, the Israelis were guilty of deception in giving the impression they had surrendered on the issue and then reneging after the public celebration when it was clearly too late to call back the victory announcement.

Harold Saunders, the man who drafted the American version of the letter, says that Dayan and the Israelis are wrong. Since Saunders' duties included drafting and collecting the side letters. it was a matter of considerable importance to him. He says the Israelis did not give any hint of their new position until Monday, when Israeli ambassador Simcha Dinitz came to him and said, "there's a problem with the settlement let-

But with the ongoing Soviet withdrawal, Western diplomats in Pakistan say, there appears to be a virtual vacuum in US policy. It is unclear, they say, whether Washington has a strategy that looks beyond ensuring a Soviet departure.

A US State Department official in Washington denies criticisms that US regional diplomacy has become "unclear" or "confused" in recent months.

"Basically, our policy goals remain the same," the official says. "Our first need is to get the Soviets out, but we expect them to meet their deadline (February 1989). This is a prerequisite for other points in our policy ... the return of refugees, the return of Afghanistan's independent status, and self-determination of US officials claim Hekmatyar's wings have long been clipped. They also argue that as he has little chance of ever making it to Kabul, it is not worth upsetting US-Pakistani relations over Pakistan's support for Hekmatvar.

Pakistan still controls distribution of weapons, however, so the US has no means of guaranteeing that aid is allocated; on an equitable basis. In addition, a strong pro-Hekmatyar lobby exists in Washington where Hezb maintains three fulltime representatives.

BELGRADE, Yugoslavia, (API: The Communist Party chief of Yugoslavia's biggest republic has publicly defied the national party leadership, raising the prospect of a new political crisis in Yugoslavia, perhaps the biggest of the postwar years.

In a Tuesday speech, Serbian chief Slobodan Milosevic openly rejected a call from the federal Communist Party presidium to put an end to increasingly boisterous nationalistic rallies in his province.

In the rallies, hundreds of thousands of Serbian and Mootenegrin demoostrators claimed their fellow Slavs were suffering mounting harassment and intimidation from ethnic Albaniaos in soutbero Kosovo province, where 90 per cent of the population is of Albanian descent. Patience

Milosevic bas declared that the minority Serbs and Montenegrins in Kosovo have "shown patience for the inefficiency of this country and the incompetence of its representatives." In Tuesday's speech, he asser-ted Yugoslav leaders had failed to honour pledges to briog peace to the region.

In a fresh rally, more thao 10,000 Serbs and Montenegrios assembled Thursday night at the Kosovo town of Vucitra to protest "aggressive assaults by (ethnic) Albaniao chauvinists and separatists" that allegedly were continuing, the Belgrade daily Politika reported.

The direct cause of that rally was an attack last week on the bouse of a Serbian woman. Two ethnic Albanians, convicted of damaging the house, were senethnic Albanian judge involved was dismissed and the terms were increased to 60 days.

Leaders io other republics, particularly in northern Slovenia, Croatia and Bosnia, bave shown opposition to Milosevic's actions and to any prospect of Serbia gaining more clout in national affairs.
Milosevic has defended the fastspreading Serbian discontent as iustified expression of popular sentiment, while opponents say it would ultimately result in anarchy.

Within hours after the Serbian's speech Tuesday, the Central Committee scheduled a session for late September that is expected to take action on Kosovo and consider Milosevic's actions. But no solution acceptable to either side is in sight.

For one thing, the Yugoslav central committee must take into account the vast popular support Milosevic enjoys in Yugoslav's biggest republic and the influen-tial Belgrade press. Demonstrators were heard singing a folk song that boldly compares bim to the late President Josip Broz Tito, the virtually uncontested leader of non-aligned Yugoslavia for three decades.

Portraits Now, the number and size of. Milosevic portraits carried by the protesters at Serbian rallies by far surpass those of Tito.

On the other hand, Milosevic. while ridiog a wave of popularity in Serbia, may well be counterbalanced or even outweighed by cautious leaders from other parts __ of Yugoslavia particularly in the wake of his open defiance of federal bodies.

Most Belgrade newspapers have kept reiterating that more than 30,000 Serbs and Montenegrins left the province in recent years because of persecution. They have attributed to Albanians many alleged cases of cattle-blinding, arson attacks, rapes. Ethnic Albanians rarely are given a chance to respond in print to what some claim are grossly distorted accounts.

In the officially controlled press, the Slav exodus is entirely blamed on the Albanians, some 500 of whom are estimated to be in jail for spreading hostile propaganda. But economic reasons are also believed to be involved in the exedus, and to have affected Albanians as well-as Slavs.

An Albaman language news paper, published in Pristing, the capital of Kosovo, recently reported that some 9.000 ethnic Albanians had left their homes for economic reasons.

CHARLES ON THE CHARLES OF A HARD OF

"Medical science historically believes that which we don't understand is psychological.
We used to think of epileptics as crazy people," said Dr Joel Saper, director of the Michigan Headache and Neurological Institute, the first such centre in the United States.

Now, we have reached somewhat of a revolutionary time in headache research. We are going through an evolution of knowledge and are rethinking our entire attitude toward headache, which is beginning to be seen as a serious illness." Control

Doctors now can control constant headaches and-or their accompanying constellation of symptoms in up to 90 per cent of patients, but there still is no cure for the chronic disease, said Saper.

The search for a cure is ham-pered by difficulties inherent in attempts to study brain func-tion and an ailment as subjective as pain, which cannot be measured like, say, blood pres"If we suspect liver problems, we draw blood and run a series of tests," Saper said. "But if something goes awry with a neurotransmitter (a chemical in the hrain), we have no good test to determine exactly what the matter is."

In addition, there is no animal model, like the mice used in cancer research, for studying the physiologic mechanisms underlying beada-

Although the exact cause of chronic headaches remains a mystery, studies have disclosed the importance of beredity. Nearly 88 per cent of migraine sufferers share the disorder with at least one member of their family.

Saper said a person's sex also plays a role. In children ages 9 to 12, boys and girls have an equal number of headaches, hut 12 years later - between ages 21 and 24 - women comprise 80 per cent of the victims.

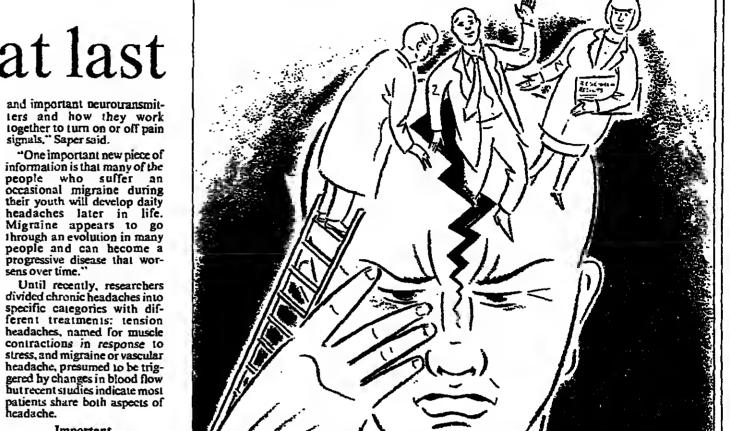

"We now know estrogen has a direct impact on certain hrain centres and blood vessels and as menstruation pregnancy, use of oral contraceptives, menopause all have direct influence on migraine headaches in women who are genetically predisposed to get them," Saper said.

More than a dozen other triggers of chronic headaches have been identified, including stress, alcohol, such foods as bacon, chicken livers, Chinese food, chocolate, herring, aged cheese, coffee or tea which conheadache-inducing chemicals, environmental pollutants, smoking, bead infections and injuries, and even sleeping late on weekends.

Researchers have found migraines can set off a variety of symptoms, including weakness, numbness, difficulty in speaking, visual abnormalities, hlood pressure elevation or decrease, changes in the balance of body fluids, pain in the abdomen, arms or legs, dizziness and thinking disturban-

Hormone but to migraine

By Jill Sherman

RESULTS of research confirming links between hormonal changes and migraine during the onset of menstruation, which could lead to improved treatment, are to be presented to the Migraine Trust International Symposium in London soon.

The research, undertaken hy Dr Frank Clifford Rose, from the Princess Margaret Migraine Clinic at Charing Cross Hospital, central London, shows that female sexhormones can influence migraine attacks.

The researchers are said to have found that a premenstrual fall in oestrogen levels can initiate migraines. The administration of oestrogen can delay attacks.

The study could lead to a hreakthrough in treatment for women who suffer migraine attacks in the first two days of their periods. Already in France women are given percutaneous oestradiol, and oestrogen gel that can be absorbed through the skin.

However migraine experts say that many other factors could trigger off an attack.

"Wbile a drop in oestrogen could trigger an altack at the onset of menstruation this will often come with another trigger such as lack of food, stress, alcohol consumption", Dr Joseph Blau, a consultant neurologist at the National Hospital, central London, said. Dr Blau said it was very difficult to distinguish mensurual migraine from other types of migraine. "Some migraine attacks in women are hormone related. In some it is a triggering mechanism, but this is not always the case.'

Headaches have at last been classified under 13 distinct headings, each with subsec-tions. The basic classifications

1. Migraine: episodic attacks of throbbing head pain lasting for about a day. Treatment only with preventive drugs as described on the left.

2. Tension-type: start at the back of the head with a sensation of stiffness and may feel as if an iron band is gripping the head. Can be chronic, unlike episodic migraine. Respond well to tricyclic drugs which are anti-depressants.

3. Claster: said to be more painful-than migraines. Occur in clusters lasting six weeks to three months, usually once a day-often waking the sufferer in the middle of the night. Six times more frequent in men than women. Easily treated with ergotamines. Another type requires lithium.

4. Miscellaneous: including the three types of "sex headache." First, and most serious is an aneurism, which can be ruptured during orgasm when blood pressure shoots up and prove fatal. "Nelson Rock-efeller may have had one," Clifford Rose says. Second, the benign orgasmic headache, which occurs more frequently in men than women and often in migraine sufferers and happens at the moment of orgasm. Third, a headache before orgasm. "Can be very disconcerting," Clifford Rose says. "although not serious." All respond well to aspirin-type painkillers. 5. Traumatic: result of injury. No treatment. Improves as the injury heals.

6. Vascular: due to constriction in the arteries, blood clots, stroke. Temporal arthritis can be the cause of painful heada-ches in the over-55s with a history of rheumatic aches, If not treated this can lead to hlindness because it is an inflamation of the arteries, including those to the eyes. Responds well to, steroids.

7. Raised pressure: from tumours, meningius. May be accompanied by vomiting, and be worse when coughing, sneezing. Different treatments.

8. Drug induced: includes the "hol dog headache" — from eating meat cured nitrates. Chinese restaurant syndrome," from monosodium glutamate, and hangovers.

Treatment: abstention. 9. Infectious disease induced:

Protein key to thrombosis

RESEARCH hyfour doctors from the Scottish National Blood Transfusion Service in Edinburgh and Scotland's Aberdeen University has led to the isolation of a protein believed to play a significant role in the development of thrombosis.

The investigation, which was funded by the British Heart

Foundation and the Scottish Home and Health Department. suggests that a high plasma concentration of the protein PAI-1, which is found in platelets and plasma as well as cells lining the blood vessels, may increase the risk of thrombosis. An antiserum prepared from cell-cultured PAI-1 is to be used to find The British Heart Foundation has now provided a further $30,000 backing for the work and this will be used to investigate the role played by the protein in regulating the process by which clots are removed from the circulation.

Fish oil may help prevent heart attacks

By Paul Recer

WASHINGTON, (AP): Oil from cold water fisb, sbown by several studies to belp prevent beart attacks, may work its magic by retarding a growth protein that promotes clogged arteries, a researcher says.
Paul L. Fox of the Cleveland

Clinic Research Institute said recently that test-tube experiments showed that oil extracted from the flesh of fish that live in cold water decreases levels of a protein called the platelet-derived growth factor.

Reducing this protein, Fox said, suppresses the growth of smooth muscle cells in arteries and, thus, helps stem the blood-vessel narrowing that can lead to a heart attack.

But Fox said the finding does not mean that people should start taking fish-oil pills as a heart attack preventative. More study needs to be done before there is proof that such dietary supplements can be effective, he said.

Several studies, including research among Greenland eskimos and fishermen in Japan and Holland, have shown that a diet rich in fish may be responsible for the low incidence of beart disease among those groups. Resear-chers previously bave sugges-ted that the reason fish diets are beneficial is that the flesh of cold water fish, such as cod, halihut and tuna, contains an oil that is rich in a particular type of fatty acid.

But Fox said researchers still are not sure precisely how the oil works to prevent beart

Some researchers have sug-gested that the oils reduce the blood levels of cholesterol and triglyceride, both of which play a role in the narrowing of arteries. Others suggest that the fisb oil changes the clotting rate in the blood, which helps prevent blockages.

Fox said he and his colla-horator, Paul E. Dicorleio, have found still another way in which fish oil may fight heart In test tube experiments, Fox said his team has found that the fish oil reduces by 50 to 85 per cent the production of the platelet-derived growth factor protein. He said similar tests using peanut oil had no effect on the growth factor production, while safflower oil was less than 10 per cent as effective.

Factor He said the growth factor protein normally stimulates the growth of smooth muscle cells, which line the outside of arteries. Fox said the growth of these muscle celts is thought to promote the lesions in the arteries that can lead to blockages, the basic problem in the heart disease process called atherosclerosis. He said all three theories need to be sested in humans or animals. Only then, said Fox, will it be known exactly how fish oil works to reduce heart attack, and in what form the oil should be taken into the human

The oil from cold water fish is more fluid than oil from beef, and is less likely to produce the solid molecules that can clog arteries, said Fox. Fish living in deep, cold water, he said, are throught to have developed this oil in their bodies to help them function in the chill depths where they live.

Doctors at the London-hased Imperial Cancer Research Fund (ICRF) say these successes may not only lead to treatment of cancers in the fluid and thin membrane surrounding the brain and spinal cord, but could also supplement or replace conven-

The trials follow a pilot study of 15 patients with various cancers which was carried out by the ICRF at the United King-dom Institute of Child Health in London, and at the Frenchay Hospital in Bristol, southwest England. Of the 15, the fund says two brain tumour patients for whom there was no hope are alive and well today, and six other patients have been given longer lives of good quality.

ANSWER: A curious thing to discuss over dinner! And sorry, hut your friend wins. A bezoar is a curious, hall-like, accumulation or concretion of hair or vegetable matter found in the stomach. It is a rare in humans, more common in animals. In humans, delayed emptying of the stomach may be one of the factors in its formation, and it is more likely in people who suffer stomach complications of published a report about the use of hyperbaric oxygen in relation to the treatment of multiple sclerosis. The mail has been voluminous, but not all letters were votes in favour of the inclusion of this information in my column. While there were statements of effectivity, and even a letter from a hospital who offered such treatment, the statement of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society. as forwarded to me by the Wisconsin chapter, deserves attention.

It reads as follows: "Following the anectodal reports in the literature and through the media, hyperbaric oxygen (HBO) received attention as a possible symptomatic treatment for multiply sclerosis. In order to better evaluate whether HBO affects multiple sclerosis beneficially the National Multiple Sclerosis Society funded a controlled scientific trial with a small oumber of patients, the results of which were published in 1983. Because the data suggested some moderate improvement, further controlled studies were in:tiated in several medical centres around the world. Three studies were presented at a major neurology meeting. The results of these studies indicate that positive effects claimed for this therapy are probably due to a placebo response, with an occasional temporary improvement in hladder function seen in some cases. The physicians involved have concluded that adequate testing has been done with hperbaric oxygen, and that the findings of functional change are at best, minimal.

Because of the minimal benefit demonstrated, the high cost and the lack of thirdparty reimbursement, the medical advisory hoard of the National Multiple Sclerosis Society does not recommend the use of HBO as a treatment for multiple sclerosis. Its letter stated: "Information provided

IT hardly seems possible that another drama could hefall superstar Elizabeth Taylor...

Yet the 56-year-old actress, who has already won battles against booze, drugs and food and emerged looking happier. more beautiful and slimmer than ever, is now being racked hy a new heartache. She is facing a delicate spine operation that could leave her a cripple.

And this time there seems no alternative to surgery for the movie queen who has suffered from a history of back problems. The final straw came when she fled in agony from the set of her latest film Zeffirelli's Young Toscanini, in which she plays an opera singer.

And, to make matters worse, the movie which was Liz's first big screen role for seven years, hit trouble too.

It was withdrawn from the Venice film festival in protest at the controversial The Last Temptation of Christ being included.

But, as Liz convalesces in the exelusive St John's Hospital in Santa Monica, California, where she booked in under the name of Beth Warner, her mind is firmly oo the operation she must have, to save her from becoming disabled.

A friend of the seven-times married star says: "Liz knows this is her last chance to sort out her hack trouble. She has been warned that even after an operation she stands a 10 per cent chance of having to live in a

Crisis

Liz's latest crisis begao with a fall at a Fourth of July party thrown by millionaire Adnan Khashoggi, in Marbella, Spain.

She was flown to Ibiza for treatment, then weot to Rome to shoot scenes for her new movie, where she spent much of the time between takes in a wheelchair,

After several days filming, Liz was flown to Los Angeles in the private jet of her latest boyfriend Malcolm Forbes. Liz's back problems began in 1944 when, as a child star, she fell from a horse, crushing discs in her spice during the filming of National Velvet

Liz's tragedy comes just four years after she entered the Betty Ford clinic determined to put the horror of too much bourbon and barbituates behind her

Liz Taylor in crisis again

Hollywood superstar Elizabeth Taylor has been dogged by drama all her life. Now, looking slimmer and more beautiful than ever, her career is being threatened yet again...this time by a spine operation that could leave her in a wheelchair.

But it has not been easy. "There's no question that I would have killed myself if I had gone on," she says now. "Drink gave me Dutch courage because I was shy, hut I'd got to the point where it was pure selfdestruction. I realised I had to do something, not just for my family, but for myself, Wheo she was admitted to the Californian clinic, Liz was finally able to face her problem and iotroduced herself at meetings as "Elizabeth...an addict and an alcoholic.

Besides her recent traumas. Liz has undergone more personal dramas than most people experience in a lifetime — six hushands (she remarried Richard Burton), widowhood, infidelity, betrayals and the death of close friends. She has managed to bounce back to the top so often that it's easy to believe she must be made from

The worst of her troubles stemmed from the failure of her six year marriage to Virginian senator John Warner. She had wanted this to be the last and most successful of her marriages. She used her passion to get him elected. Yet at theend was expected to do nothing more than the traditional Washiogton wife, sitting at home giving dinner parties for

But Liz has never been content to live in somebody else's shadow.

"There just wasn't room io his life for me," she says. "Politics is a very hard mistress to fight. She was a lady I couldn't cope with."
Now Liz says defiantly: "I'm much more at peace with myself. I've realised there's a wooderful world out there for

Liz has said she only really loved two of her husbands her second, producer Mike Todd, who was killed in a plane crash only 13 months after their wedding - and actor Richard

She confesses: "After Mike, I thought I'd never love again. Then aloog came Richard and I realised that my love hadn't dried up after all." She married Burton io 1964 - after the disastrous marriage to Eddie

When Liz re-emerged looking as slim and beautiful as ever her career, for a time, was put on the back hurner. She immersed herselfio other causes -the campaign against AIDS for example, of which she is national chairwoman in America.

She says: "Most people think I became involved with the Foundation because of Rock Hudsoo, but I was io the chair at the first beoefit dinner, seven

mooths before I knew Rock was sick.

"I got involved because I was so angry. The attitude that peo-ple had — the higotry! Nobody was doing anything and that incensed me. I don't think people can think about it enough until after a cure is found."

Appear Liz cootinues to appear all over the USA at benefits for the victims of the deadly disease and she indirectly gives huge sums of money to the campaign. She recently endorsed a new perfume, Passioo, aod although she receives a royalty on every bottle sold, a propor-tion of the profits also goes into the funds for AIDS research.

Since the actress has expressed her desire to work she has. not surprisingly, been inuo-dated with offers. The American soaps are clamouring to snap her up -each offering a huge package ($700,000, is the highest figure rumoured, for 10 episodes of Dynasty).

Liz also believes she has at last worked out what went wrong with her marriages. Marriage fails because of the lack of communication," she says. "Wheo people stop talking and listening, that's when the trouble starts."

Liz certainly has eoough men who would like to lead her up the aisle agaio. Ooe of the top candidates is Hollywood smoothie George Hamilton.

Elizabeth says they have a wonderful time together. 'George has one of the best senses of humour around," she says. Of Elizabeth, George says: With everything she's been through, she's still won-derfully naive.

Intriguing

Most intriguiog of all is Elizabeth's relationship with whacky pop star Michael Jackson. He sends her roses, love letters and poems and telephooes her several times a day. "I adore him," Elizabeth says. "He's the sweetest person in the whole world."

He believes she's the only woman he's ever met who truly understands his problems because, like him, she's been a star sioce childhood.

Lionel Ritchie reckons

Liz Taylor who has already won battles against booze, drugs and food is now racked by back trouble.

Michael's sanity was saved hy his relationship with Elizabeth. "They both know about isolatioo and looeliness," he says. Neil Simon, the award-winniog playwright, is another suitor. And, although Liz broke off her engagement to Mexican lawyer Victor Luna. they remain friends. But the most recent cootender is Malcolm Forbes, 70, the publishing tycoon whom Elizabeth has been dating for the last year. Another of Liz's more recent friendships is with singer Barry Manilow. "She's the most feminine person I've ever met," he says. "You really feel like a mao around her. Even though she's older than I am she still turns me oo.

But whoever marries Liz will be marrying a woman of untold wealth. She lives in the Kirkehy Mansioo in Los Angeles' Bel Air, the most expensive suburh in the world.

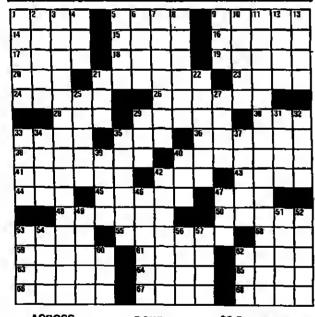

Her £26 million house is crammed full with works of art. with a Renoir, a Van Gogh, a Degas and several Utrillos io the sitting room and an Augustus John haoging over the washhasin in the powder room. The man of her choice is not likely to be short of money of course, or diamonds.

Doctors say that even after an operation, Taylor stands a 10 per cent chance of having to live in a wheelchair.

Hong Kong cracks down on counterfeit | Male models fight for Tourists coming to Hong Kong from other sounterfeit capitals, such as Bangkok, Tsipei and Seoul, should think twice before loading themselves with fakes. Hong Kong customs officials are looking for caches considered large enough to cross the line from personal use to commercial gain.

HONG KONG: From Rolex watches to Mickey Mouse, South-east Asia is cracking down on counterfeiters and, for the first tune, the tourists who keep them in business.

The counterfeit clampdown is a determined bid to boost Asia's image in the eyes of Western trading partners, who say the thriving fakes business is cutting into both the reputation and export figures of the real thing.

Scoul, Bangkok, Singapore, Taiper and Hong Kong vie as the fake capitals of the world.

In any of these cities, business at hawkers' stalls on sidewalks is far brisker than in the plush boutiques like Chanel and Christian Dior.

A careful Hong Kong shopper may pay $45 for one variety of fake Rolex watch, compared with $1,900 for the real thing. A fake Louis Vintion handbaggoes for $51 on the street, one-tenth of the cost of the genuine article in a

The fakes may be used to amuse — or perhaps even deceive — friends back at home, but tourists are having to look harder to find them. At least one airport has full-time customs officials looking for caches considered large enough to cross the line from personal use to commercial

Taiwan, reputedly home to the best fake Rolexes, has cracked down hard over the past four years, organising regular police sweeps and completely overhauling its copyright laws.

But some say pure economic factors, such as the rising value of the Taiwan dollar and spiralling labour costs, have strangled Taiwan's dollar industry, not tougher laws.

He said counterfeit watchmakers have been shifting entire currency is stable, labour is among the cheapest in Asia, and laws are relatively lax.

"Authoriues here don't see anything wrong with bringing in fakes for personal use," he said. Customs officials in Singapore

PARIS, (Reuter): Male models from all over the world are gathering in Paris with one thought in mind — winning a prized place on the fashion catwalks and being spotted by an international talent scout.

For while a moment of glory at the ready-to-wear shows pays badly in modelling terms, a young unknown parading a suit by Yves Saint Laurent or Jean-Paul Gaultier could be launching a million-dollar

"These collections are a unique opportunity for new models to meet famous designers and be seen by talent-spotters from Milan, New York and London," says Patrick Nor-mandin, in charge of male models at Glamour, a leading Paris modelling agency.
"Models may be paid more elsewhere but this is where they make their reputations and build their careers. A few of the boys who appear at the collecuons will end up being the highest-paid models of the year. The shows are all about

Still, we don't need science to tell us that laughing feels good. and most of us know we don't laugh nearly enough. Remember that everyone can have a sense of humour. Maybe you can't remember a joke or tell it well if you do recall it, but that doesn't mean you can't be amusing with friends. Think about how you could turn an awkward incident into an entertaining story. If some minor disaster comes along, like a car breakdown on a rainy night, think of it as a situation comedy. You'll be amazed at how quickly that puts things in perspective. And it may well make a funny story later.

Recognise what makes you laugh and put more of it in your life. Does your taste run to Laurel and Hardy? Bugs Bunny? Sunday funnies? which IV strongs do you like? Which writers - Andy Rooney, Erma Bombeck, Mark Twain? Once you've figured out what amuses you most, Dr Fry suggests, start a humour library. Collect your favourite books, cartoons, videocassettes, films, audiotapes and just funny gadgets. Then, when you're having trouble seeing the bright sale, head for your books and tapes for a quick pick-me-up.

Practice injecting laughter into "serious" situations. "We're happy because we laugh, not the other way around," says Annette Goodheart, Ph.D., a psychotherapist in Santa Lar-bara, California. "The usual way of describing the process is that you have a sense of humour, so you laugh, and that changes your attitude. I start by laughing, which changes my attitude immediately. It's easy to fake laughter — your dia-phragm doesn't distinguish between that and the real thing. It's like starting a car engine. The physical motion triggers real laughter." If you're having trouble see-ing the bumour in a situation, Goodheart says, describe it in a deliberately light way: "The I.R.S. is auditing me, tee hee." The ridiculousness of that sentence tickles the funny bone, helping you to change the way you look at it. You might try adopting the paradoxical approach.

When you can't seem to laugh about a problem, try the opposite. Tell yourself this is no laughing matter and nothing can make you laugh about it. Usually the harder we try not to laugh, the more irresistible the urge becomes.

Another technique is to carry your anxiety to its most ludicrous extreme, until the situation you imagine seems so ridiculous you can't help but find it funny. Let's say you're agonizing over a mistake you made at work. Picture the entire company going hankrupt, with you and the chairman reduced to selling apples on the street corner, all because of your error. Chances are thin aren't really that bad and the imaginary scene puts this in perspec-

Avoid self-criticism by poking fun at your flaws. "When you get down on yourself," explains Ray DiGiuseppe, director of training and research at New York's Institute for Rational-Emotive Therapy, "you become more depressed - and the more depressed you are, the harder it is to do something about your problem. But if you can laugh about your troubles, you're more likely to think of a way to deal with them."

DiGiuseppe and his wife have made a joke out of his tendency to work long hours. "When she wants to sit down and have a talk, I kid her that she'll have to call my secretary to make an appointment. Making fun of my workaholism reminds us I'm aware of the Use humour to lighten np your relationships. By easing tension, laughter can pave the way for better communication in almost any relationship, from home to the workplace. "One couple remembered the day they made love outdoors - and the lawn chair folded up on them! They chose the words 'lawn chair' and agreed that whenever either one of them evoked that phrase. their argument would stop," Goodheart says. "It always made them laugh and broke the tension and helped them resolve the problem. Hope Mihalap's family adopts a foreign accent when band is Russian, my father is Greek, and I'm a Southerner," she says. "So ever since our kids were small, we've found a lot of humour in the way people talk. If they are getting on each other's nerves, they il start talking in heavy Russie week! Even if one of them knows there's reprimand there, it's easier to take when it's said in a funny

Joking with someone around whom you're usually serious can add a new dimension to the relationship. "This is an assignment I give my students," says Harvey Mindess. "I tell them to think about it beforehand, because it isn't always appropriate. But the ones who try it report remarkable results. You can really break through to a new level of intimacy, openness and relaxation with another person this way."

Rediscover silliness; rediscover toys. We can learn from children who haven't yet begun to censor their mirth. "I'm a firm believer in props - toys, posters, anything that makes us laugh," says Allen Klein, a professional speaker on humour in San Francisco. "Everyone in my workshops gets a clown nose, and I tell them to keep props handy. When I'm in a traffic jam, I take out the jar of bubble soap I keep in the car, open the window and blow bubbles. Then I look around and see smiling faces, so going into a dime-store photo booth, making the silliest faces you can think of and carrying those picture around with you. "When you notice yourself getting uptight," he says, "pull out the photos. They'll give you a laugh and remind you that life can be funny too."

When you really can't laugh, don't force it. Sometimes nothing can help you see the bright side of situation. When that happens, you may simply need to ride it out. You may have to get out your grief or your anger first, before you can begin to think about looking for the funny side. Laughter can help - but not all the time.

ridicule. It's one thing to get people laughing, it's another to laugh at men. Teasing uses laughter to control others, to disguise critical remarks and avoid responsibility for your true feelings. "Can't you take a joke?" may be one of the most destructive questions in the language. "Often people who tease others have little insight into what they're really doing," says Quinton Wilkes, Ph.D., a psychotherapist in New York City. "If you feel demeaned or under attack, tell the other person how you feel." Anyone can

Data will be a significant factor on world stock markets

Currency market focuses on US trade report

LONDON, Sept 11, (Reuter): International currency dealers, anxious about the health of the US economy, are focusing on Wednesday's key American trade report for a hulletin on whether to invest in the dollar. A sharp fall in the oil price on Friday provided an antidote to a US government report showing that wholesale prices rose more than expected in August.

debt talks

The Labour Department said the producer price index — the inflation gauge for wholesale markets - rose 0.6 per cent, up from 0.5 per cent in July. But the hite was taken out of the report late in the day when oil prices sagged on signs that OPEC had not called special talks to try and bolster oil prices.

"The (price) data showed no clear guidance on trends on US rates, and the dollar may move narrowly until US trade data next week unless there are significant official remarks, "a Lon-don currency dealer said, echoing a widely-held view.

In New York, the dollar closed at 1.8510 West German marks on Friday night, up from 1.8445 on Thursday. It edged up to 133.70 Japanese yen from 133.60.

Dealers said the July trade report, due to be released on Wednesday at 1230 GMT, held the key to the dullar's value next week and expected quiet husiness ahead of the numbers.

Share dealers said the report would also be a significant factor on world stock markets, unsettled hy inflation fears and interest rate hikes.

A wider-than-expected trade gap could undermine the dollar whereas a surprise cut might spur dollar buying, analysts said.

Economists believe a drop in US imports trimmed the nation's trade deficit in July, but opinions vary widely over the extent of that import reduction. European analysts generally will fall to $11.6 billion after a $12.54 hilling shortfall in June.

"We expect a decent pick-up in exports and very little from the import side," said Richard Berner of Salomon Brothers Inc in New York, who said the trade gap would be $11.5 billion. The huge US deficit has been blamed by some economists for creating world trade imbalances. imbalances

At the weekend, US Federal Reserve Board Governor Robert Heller said in a West German radio interview that imbalances were being corrected slowly, hut that on the balance of payments front the United States had hoped for faster growth in other countries to help reduce these

"Nevertheless, the (growth) figures in Europe are not had, we cannot complain," Heller told Hessische Rundfunk, adding that one could do relatively little when trade imbalances continued to exist even after faster economic growth.

"One cannot simply wreck the entire world economy in order to get rid of (trade) imhalances,' Heller said. "We will continue to work slowly ... on reducing these imbalances.

Heller said the fact that the dollar had not risen showed that inflation fears were being quelled. "This is proof that inflation in the US is being held in inflation, according to the Wall Street Journal. Hans Tietmeyer, state secretary of the West German Finance Ministry, expressed general satisfaction with current policy co-ordination among the Group of Seven leading industrial nations but called for "small steps" toward closer co-operation within the group. Meanwhile, Bank of Japan Governor Satoshi Sumita said that a change in Japan's monetary policy isn't necessary, though he emphasised that the central bank is ready to aci "appropriately and flexibly" in response to currency and price movements.

Tietmeyer, a top West German economic policy maker, said a discussion on a fundamentally new monetary system would be of little use. He made his comments in a wide-ranging article published in the Neue Zuercher Zeitung newspaper.

In his article, Tietmeyer said formal currency target zones or a world-wide application of the European Monetary System model would serve only to divert attention from the current economic and monetary policy problems. He said such plans would raise "unrealistic expectations.

Co-ordination

But he also suggested that the current monetary system's coordination mechanisms could be improved, "It is a constant task for the finance ministers and the central hank governors of the major industrial countries to study suggestions that move in this direction," Tietmeyer wrote.

Tietmeyer also said that the currency-rate turhulence of the early 1980s illustrates the need for greater stability. But he added that the G-7's 1985 Plaza accord has yielded results. "As a direct participant in many of these discussions, I am convinced that without the strengthened efforts toward co-operation, many political decisions would have turned out differently and the international adjustment process of external accounts and free trade would have proved less beneficial," he wrote.

Tietmeyer conceded that some doubts have surfaced about the political will of G-7 nations to cooperate. But he said too much criticism should be avoided in consideration of the different conditions and priorities in each of the countries.

In an apparent answer to criticism of West German policy, Tietmeyer said: "International co-operation doesn't mean that a country is forced into something that contradicts its internal economic goals and needs." Instead, co-operation should strive to serve the interests of all countries involved, in order to reduce external imbalances and achieve greater currency stability, he intervention is a useful, shortterm way to smooth currency movements, "especially when (it is) co-ordinated," Tietmeyer said. Co-ordinated intervention also can "signal" the markets when currency movements aren't grounded in reasonable fundamental factors, he added.

But he cautioned that intervention can only be successful over the longer term when it doesn't happen "against the market" and when it is supported hy a credible economic and fiscal

All told, Tietmeyer gave high marks to the G-7 process. "Seen together, the economic and monetary policy co-ordination since (the Plaza agreement) has been quite successful." despite periodic "difficulties and frictions," he said.

Separately, the Bank of Japan's Sumita said in a speech at a convention of insurance companies in Tokyo that prices have to be watched "with the greatest possible care" to avoid inflation amid continued economic expansion. He emphasised, however, that a collapse in price stability isn't likely at the moment.

"Domestic prices are generally stable, reflecting the effect of the ven's sustained strength, growing imports of low-priced finished goods, and heightening competition in the domestic market as the structure of the Japanese economy becomes more reliant on domestic demand," Sumita said.

Sumita's insistence that there is no need to tighten Japanese credit conditions came as speculation wanted about an increase in the country's discount rate. Such speculation was widespread following last month's rise in lending rates by Western central banks, including the US Federal Reserve and West Germany's Bundeshank, But Sumita and other Japanese officials, including Finance Minister Kiichi Miyazawa, repeatedly have denied that Tokyo would adjust its monetary

Mozambique and S. Africa try to revive economic co-operation

MAPUTO, Sept 11, (Reuter): South African President P.W. Botha travels on Monday to warravaged Mozambique, where his country is regarded as both the hostile backer of right-wing guerrillas and an economic powerhouse whose co-operation is badly needed by its poorer neighhour.

Botha and Mozamhican President Joaquim Chissano will hold a day of talks at Songo near the Cahora Bassa hydro-electric dam — a frustrated project to harness the mighty Zambezi river that symbolises the complex relationship between their two states.

More charges may be laid against US securities firm

NEW YORK, Sept 11, (Renter): The Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) may file more complaints against brokerage firm Drexel Burnham Lambert Inc, hit this week with a government suit charging it with insider trading and other securities law violations, the SEC chairman says. David Ruder said in an interview to be broadcast on US television today that a Flouse of Representatives committee investigating the prestigious firm's dealings in high-risk, high-yield junk bonds may prompt a new-series of complaints. A transcript of the interview was released yesterday. "Well, if based on this information, which leads us in an investigation — undoubtedly, if we find something, we will have more complaints," Ruder said. The SEC on Wednesday charged that Drexel secretly agreed with convicted insider trader Ivan Boesky to defraud Drexel clients, trade on insider informa-Ivan Boesky to defrand Drexer cuents, user on minimum tion and manipulate stock prices. Representative John Dingell, the chairman of the House Energy and Commerce Committee investigating the junk bond dealings said the report would likely lead to further charges. "We anticipate the to the basis of the certification of the record of our committee to the SEC, that there will be subsequent proceedings by the SEC on this matter," Dingell said. Dingell said be believed a bill which would increase penalties for insider trading and reward those who informed authorities of wrongdoing would pass quickly in Congress despite attempts by some Senators to tie the bill to other issues.

Abu Dhabi repeats demand for higher OPEC quota

ABU DHABI, Sept 11, (Renter): The Crown Prince of Abu Dhabi repeated the United Arab Emirates' (UAE) demand for a higher OPEC production quota in an interview published today. Sheikh Khalifa Bin Zayed Al Nahyan told the Paris based magazine Al Youm Al Sahan the present quota of 948,000 harreis per day (BPD) had made the UAE the victim of all agreements by the Organisation of Petroleum Exporting Countries. "We hope OPEC members will take into consideration on the busis of objective factors that the UAE quote is not fair and does not match our vast oil potential or go with the quotas of other states, he said. "We are now looking forward to a new production quotal agreement that will ensure the UAE's natural size among OPEC producers," he said in the interview, carried by the official Emirates News Agency WAM. "We will continue to work for achieving that goal with an open heart and OPEC's unity and survival will remain our primary objective." The UAE wants a quota of 1.5 million BPD to match what it says is its large output city and reserves, officially set at about 95 l

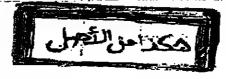

Industry sources said last week nominations for UAE crude totalled 1.9 million BPD during September, following a request to lifters by state-run oil companies to take as much as possible. They said Abu Dhabi alone—the UAE's biggest producer—was set to load 1.5 million during the month while Dubai output was pegged at another 400,000 BPD. UAE output has been steadily rising since May, when the newly-formed Supreme Petroleum Council asked operating companies to boost production to 1.5

IMF team ends talks on economic reform in Egypt

CAIRO, Sept 11. (Reuter): The International Monetary Fund (IMF), branded a "quack doctor" by Egyptian President Hosni Mubarak, has ended an apparently inconclusive round of talks on economic reform in Egypt. The weekly Akhbar Al Yom newspaper reported that Mubarak would seek support from Western leaders for Egypt's stand in the tough, but critical negotiations set to continue later. "This imposter prescribes a huge dose of medicine in one go instead of a daily pill," Mubarak said in a nationwide speech before the IMF team left Cairo at the end of the week. Mubarak said the IMF wanted Egypt to raise prices on certain goods and services from 40 to 80 per cent. "I can't raise prices at one time by 40 per cent because nobody would be able to survive," he said. "It would not be an IMF operation, it would be slaughter." Diplomats said Muharak's words, while containing a message to Western creditors, were also aimed at appearing populace grumbling over soaring prices. "Obviously it's for domestic consumption, but it doesn't suggest that anything great has been achieved (in the IMF talks), said one Western dip The IMF wants Egypt to reduce its budget deficit, equal to about 17 per cent of gross domestic product totalling $43 billion. One obvious way to achieve that is to slash state subsidies, forcing prices up. Other IMF prescriptions include a boost in domestic interest rates, which at about 13 per cent are equal to less than half the current inflation rate. Egypt needs a new IMF agreement to replace an 18-month reform programme that officially expired at the end of June. A fresh seal of approval would bring new IMF credits, and, more importantly, would allow Egypt to return to the Paris Club to further reschedule its debts to Western creditor nations. Egyptian foreign debt totals $43 billion.

Hanson sells stake in BCI

LONDON, Sept 11 - Hanson, the industrial conglomerate, appears to have lost interest in bidding for Blue Circle Industries, the cement group. Blue Circle, reacting to speculation in its shares, approached Hanson, which said it had built up a small stake but this had now been sold. David Poole, the managing director, said yesterday: "Hanson indicated that it had held about 2 million shares in our company over the last three years which is less than 1 per cent, but these have now been sold." The shares are less than I per cent, but these have now been sold." The shares are thought to have been acquired in Blue Circle during an unsuccessful dawn raid in December, according to a London daily. Blue Circle also reported a 43 per cent increase in pre-tax profits to £85.2 million in the first six months of the year. Earnings per share jumped 39 per cent to 24p while the dividend is up 20 per cent to 6p a share. The improvement was fuelled by a sharp jump in profits from its British cement division, benefitting from higher prices and strong demand. Sales were running 15 per cent above last year and the company was forced to import supplies to meet demand. But Poole, who admitted plants were working at full capacity, said there were no plans to build more capacity. "Carrent prices do not justify investment in new plant. There is a boom in the building industry cycle and there must be some question of its long-term sustainability." he said. "People are confident of the cycle being maintained in 1989 but you would have to be bold to talk about 1990."

World grain supplies may drop further billion hushels. The American corn estimate

WASHINGTON, Sept 11, (Reuter): Estimates of already dwindling world grain supplies are likely to drop further in a key Agriculture Department crop report coming out on Monday.
"Unless we bave some offsets in some other countries, total (wheat and feedgrain) stocks could go down," said Gerald Rector, an Agriculture Department official who oversees the world crop estimates published each month. Industry analysts asked about the grain outlook said another fall in stocks could force changes in US export policy if it looks more likely that key importers will have to scramble for supplies during the coming year. Lower

"If the numbers are greatly lower, it will exacerbate the concerns aiready expressed about the low grain stocks," said Steve McCoy, director of the North American Export Grain Association.

American grain stocks have been drawn down by the combined impact of drought which has also burt world stocks - and an aggressive US export policy.

Additional declines in world stocks will bring more pressure from grain buyers, including the Soviet Unico, on wheal producers sending jitters around world grain markets.

Exports will probably have to be rationed, analysts said. Slowdown

In the United States, lower wheat stocks may force a slowdown in the administratioo's export subsidy programme—
the Export Enhancement Programme (EEP)—through which the vast majority of US

wheat exports have been sold. "It is clear the Agriculture Department will not be able to both natural and man-made offer EEP to everyone who wants it," said a Washington grain consultant.

Sizing up expectations of Monday's report, analysts say another drop in the US corn crop is a virtual certainty and crop-problems elsewhere around the world will likely lower estimates in several othe major grain producing areas too.

Important

Estimates for Canadian and Argentine wheat and East European coarse grains are likely to also show notable drops when the report is released, analysts

Soviet grain production, at the moment around 210 million tonnes, could also fall, but experts said it is unclear how much the Agriculture Department would lower its estimates.

will be especially important, because Monday's figures are expected to be very close to the final 1988 production tally. The United States normally prodoces more than 40 per cent of the world's corn crop, so a sharp reduction in its crop would cut total world corn and coarse grain supplies. "The corn number coming out of this report is likely to be solid," said Paul Prentice, an economisi for farm sector economics con-sulting group. "The primary importance of this report is that it will lock in the corn number." The Agriculture Department last month pegged US corn production at 4.5 hillion bushels - down almost 40 per cent from last year. Prentice and others predicted Monday's corn estimate would drop to about 4.3

Expected reductions in the East European com crop could further reduce world stocks. World supplies of corn and other coarse grains, usually used for livestock feed, are currently estimated by the Agriculture Department at about 128 million tonnes, the lowest level since the drought-reduced supplies of 1983-84. 'Grain stocks are low, and if we had another major drought, we'd bave some problems," Rec-Rector said one year of low grain stocks does not necessarily mean a crisis. We could still recover from this in one year," he said. "But we're not going to come back in one year and surge back to the levels we've been trying to get rid

UN to review African recovery plan

UNITED NATIONS, Sept 11. (Reuter): A UN committee tomorrow begins a mid-term review of an African economic recovery programme against a backdrop of continuiog deterioration in the continent's economic climate.

The two-week review is a follow-up to a special general assembly in 1986 that urged all governments to help implement a $128 billion five-year plan to ease Africa's economic plight. Plan

The assembly backed an Organisation of African Unity (OAU) recovery programme under which just over a third of the money would be raised by donor countries.

The plan placed special emphasis on rehabilitating agriculture, whose failure due to

But a recent report by UN Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, in preparation for the review, painted a bleak picture. "Economic performance during 1986-1988 has been generally disappointing," he wrote. "The gross domestic product (GDP) of the region rose by 1.0 per cent in 1986 and 0.8 per cent in 1987 bowever, per capita income fell by 2.0 and 2.2 per cent in those years. Performance The performance of individual countries varied, and this overall picture does not fully reveal the extent of distress experienced in many parts of the continent." Perez de Cuellar said efforts to implement economic reforms

He said the net flow of assistance to Africa increased from $17.9 billion in 1985 to 19.9 billion in 1986 and 22.9 billion in 1987, in nominal terms. "However, measured in real terms, resource flows were lower in 1986 and 1987 than in 1985," the secretary-general said. A mounting debt burden. depressed commodity prices and

LONDON, Sept 11, (AP): The likely cancellation of England's cricket tour of India could lead the national team into the international cricketing wilderness, the British press said yesterday. A decision on whether the tour will go ahead despite the Indian government's refusal to grant a visa to eight England players with South African links, is expected from the Test and County Cricket Board (TCCB) the sport's ruling body -

Alian Smith, the TCCB's chief executive, said Friday that he did not think the tour a realistic prospect but they would spend the weekend considering all options before making a final decision.

The TCCB had to re-evaluate the November tour after the Indian government said it would not give entry visas to half of the 16-strong England party.

The eight are captain Graham Gooch, vice-captain John Emburey, batsmen Allan Lamb. Tim Robinson, Kim Barnett and Robert Bailey and bowlers Graham Dilley and Phil Newport.

All are on a United Nations blacklist of sportsmen who have competed in South Africa, which is banned from international sports over its pobcy of aparth-

British newspapers warned that if the TCCB does decide against the tour it could precipitate a split between white and black cricketing nations or leave England isolated from the rest of the world.

Ignore England are in danger of becoming the lepers of world cricket," the Daily Express said. They face isolation if they ignore the depth of feeling over the South African issue."

England were cast towards a cricketing wilderness," the cricket correspondent of the London Times said, adding that England's winter tours will now concern Australia and New Zealand exclusively.

The tabloid Sun newspaper said England faced an international cricket blackout. "Now England may never again tour the black Test-playing countries - India. Pakistan, the West Indies and Sri Lankat From

They as there was little obstace of reorganising the Test schedule, English cricket would be in limbo.

It said the January meeting of the International Cricket Con-ference, where officials would discuss the question of wbether the bome Test country had the right to veto the visiting side, bad become vital: "If nothing is decided in Jannary then there exists the possibility that England could find themselves isolated to the cricket world, for there is no guarantee that other white Test-playing countries, Australia and New Zealand, would back England," the Guardian said. Consider A conservative member of parliament suggested that England should now consider a tour of South Africa this winter if the tour to India is cancelled.

Timothy Janman said: "If they are short of cricket this winter they should now consider a tour of South Africa in order to show that, on purely sporting grounds, we play against whichever coun-tries we like." The last time an England cricket tour was cancelled was in 1968 when the TCCB called off a visit to South Africa due to that country'a objection to Basil

D'Olivera, a black England But even if Eogland does not embark on an official South African tour it is certain that individual players will continue to play there and possible that a "rebel" tour of England players be organised. The Daily Express said the TCCB is set to offer the England squad members a percentage of the 12,000-pouods (20,000-dollars) they would have earned in India if they sign contracts to 'play" for England during the winter. This would prevent them from playing overseas for anyone other than the official England team. Furious

Around 70 England eluh professionals earn extra money during the winter from playing in South Africa and Gooch, who led the last unofficial tour of South Africa in 1982, had to break his contract with South African team western province to allow him to assume the captaincy for the India tour. But the tabloid newspaper the Star reported that senior England players were "furious" with the TCCB's attempts to stop them from going to South Africa. They quoted an unnamed senior England player — all players were ordered by the TCCB not to talk to the press - as saying players should be free to do as they liked.

Cowdrey puts Kent on top

LONDON, Sept 11, (Reuter): Graham Cowdrey, the youngest member of the cricketing family who have served Keot with distinction for nearly 40 years, helped to sustain his team's English County Championship challenge with a hard-hitting 80 oot out yesterday.

Wazzan went on to set the second fastest time on the first stage of the following day. "I took the lead till stage 10, and was lengthening it all the time. There were 21 seconds between myself and Ahbas at the end."

The engine badly needed rebuilding. I had ordered a new engine but it didn't arrive in time." This year's challenge format was not so accommodating in terms of the points system. Last year the drivers accumulated points from each of the three railies which composed the series, but this time, only one driver, in this case

Graf goes home to relax before Games

FRANKFURT, West Germany, Sept 11. (Reuter): Grand Slam champion Steffi Graf returned home almost unnoticed today for a brief rest before heading for the Olympics in Seoul.

Graf, 19, accompanied by her parents, arrived in Frankfurt on an overnight flight from New York, only a few bours after beating Gabriela Sabatini at the US Open women's final.

As Graf waited to retrieve her luggage sbe signed a few autographs and was cheered by other people at the airport.

"I like it this way," Graf, holding a bouquet, said in reference to the lack of an organised welcom-

Yesterday Graf began the match nervously, making two quick unforced errors at the start, but the two teen-agers soon settled into a baseline slugging duel on the stadium court.

Graf, feeling for the touch of ber rocket foreband, and Sabatini, searching for depth on ber topspin groundstrokes, man-oeuyred one another round the court trying to pry open a winning angle to shoot for,

The West German earned the first break of the opening set in the fourth game as errors crept into the Argentine's game, but Sabatini broke right back to make it 3-2.

This time it was Graf who made the errors, sending a forehand wide, another long and then netting a backband approach as the fifth seed pressed. the attack.

Graf earned her critical break in the eighth game for a 5-3 lead as she stepped up the pressure on Sabatini by coming to the net. A backhand approach winner sealed the game for the West Ger-

Graf tried to pounce on the chance to clinch the set by jumping out to 40-15 for a double set point as Sabatini again made a pair of careless mistakes. But this time the Argentine battled back with two brilliant plays. First she boldly stroked a backhand crosscourt winner into the corner, then followed with a perfect backhand topspin lob that froze Graf in midcourt.

Graf was slowed but not stopped. She promptly reached a third set point and converted it with a sizzling forehand crosscourt shot that splattered off Sabatini's racket at the net. Sabatini proved her mettle in the second set. The 18-year-old added more loft to her topspin strokes to push Graf further and further back and inhibit the West German from hitting out on her famed forehand. The bigh-arching topspin bothered Graf who made an unusually high nine forehand errors and four backhand errors as the Argentine battled her way! back into the match.

Graf fell behind love 40 in the second game but railied to hold ber serve

In the fourth game, Grafagain fell behind 0-40 after two unforced errors. She pulled to 15-40 on a service winner but then ended a rally by striking a backhand long.

Errors

The West German broke back in the seventh game but a series of errors in the next game put her bebind 15-40 and Sabatini delivered a llosting topspir forehand which Graf returned into the net to give the Argentine a 5-3 pired against him. His McLaren team-mate and only rival for the title. Frenchman Alain Prost, had retired after 34 laps with engine trouble after lying in second place, leaving Senna a seemingly clear run But his hopes were ended as he led the way into the first chicane on the 50th lap of the 51-lap race.

Ahead of him, Schlesser had lost control of his Williams and skidded off towards the sand

As the Frenchman forced his car hack onto the track he strayed into Senna's racing line across the kerbs and sent the Brazilian's cur spinning. Senna's McLaren finally came to a halt on the other side of the track, stuck on a kerb and facing the wrong way - and his race was over. The Arrows team of American

Eddie Cheever and Briton Derek Warwick were third and fourth - their best finish of the season ahead of the normallyaspirated March of Italian Ivan Capelli and Benetton of Thierry

Boutsen of Belgium. Warwick drove quite super-bly, like Italian Alessandro Nannini. who finished ninth in his Benetton after starting in the pit mate at the end. The result ended McLaren's winning sequence—they triumphed in all II previous races but left the position at the head of the drivers championship unchanged, Senna leading Prost by three points and three wins with four of the season's 16 races remaining. The next Grand Prix is at Estoril, Portugal, on September

Soviets get golf course

MOSCOW, Sept 11, (Reuter): Golf, once deemed too bourgeois for the Soviet Union, has finally arrived in Moscow, although the grass for the country's first course has been shipped from Sweden and few of the players are likely to be Russians.

Today, in a diplomanic quarter of the city near the Moscow river, Swedish ice hockey player turned golf entrepreneur Sven Tumba, 57, formally opened the driving range of Tumba Golf Cluh Mos-

World heavyweight boxing champion Mike Tyson and Brazilian soccer legend Pele, both confessing they knew noth-ing about golf, were among guests at a ceremony also attended by Lev Zaikov, Moscow Communist Party leader and a Politburo member. Tumba evidently moved faster than Armand Hammer, the California billionaire who has had dealings with the Kremlin for 60 years and who in June announced plans to build an 18hole, 6,800 metre course about 30 km outside Moscow.
